Introduction

The Town of Hempstead, for the most part, is located on the only plain east of the Appalachian Mountains. The boundaries of the approximately sixty thousand-acre Hempstead Plains roughly corresponds in the North to the present-day villages of New Hyde Park, Garden City, Garden City Park, Mineola, Carle Place, Westbury, and New Cassel; Sunrise Highway to the South; and from eastern Queens County in New York City to just east of the Nassau/Suffolk County border. When early settlers first viewed the Plains in its pristine state, they saw a level topography, generously interspersed with small streams. Virtually treeless, it was instead covered by five- to six-foot-high grasses and a profusion of wildflowers.

As early as the 1600s the Plains had been designated as a commons to be used by all primarily for haying and as grazing land for cattle. It was not until 1784, when the Town of North Hempstead separated from the Town of Hempstead, that land was assigned to individual farmers and the cultivation of the Plains began in earnest. The scattered farms interspersed among the equally scattered villages gradually developed into thriving communities. Suburbanization, industrialization, and ultimately urbanization have created that which we see today.²

Flat and, for the most part, unobstructed by trees, the Hempstead Plains was conducive to the early introduction of sporting events. In 1665 Governor Richard Nicolls established the New Market Race Course, the country's first formal race track, in the northwestern section of the Town of Hempstead. Continued interest in horseracing led to the establishment of Belmont Park Racetrack in 1905 and Roosevelt Raceway in 1940.³

Hunting was formalized as a sport when in 1877 Robert Center, William C. Peet, August Belmont Purdy, and Frank Gray Griswold rented a farm from the heirs of Alexander Turney Stewart and established the Queens County Drag Hounds Club just east of Garden City on land that would later become Mitchel Field. In 1880 the club moved to Westchester County for two years after which it returned to the Island following its merger with the Rockaway Hunting Club.

In 1880 the Meadow Brook Hunt Club was organized on the future Mitchel Field site thus enabling the Rockaway Hunting Club, which had been established in 1878 in Far Rockaway by J. D. Ceever, Louis

Neilson, George Work, Ernest C. La Montagne, Rene La Montagne, Edward Nicoll Dickerson, and William Voss, to lay claim to being the oldest country club in the United States in continuous use.⁴

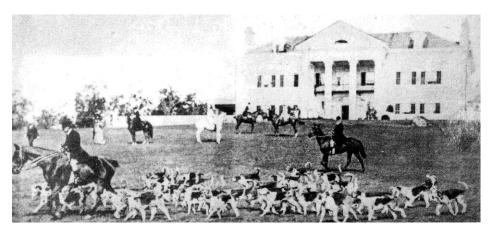

The problems encountered by the two clubs were legendary. The rapid development of Far Rockaway and the lack of adequate numbers of foxes in the area, which had plagued the Rockaway from its inception, induced the club to relocate to its present site in Lawrence in 1884.⁵ The dramatic increase in both residential and commercial development was a constant concern to both clubs resulting in the secession of hunting at the Rockaway by 1920.⁶

Rockaway Hunting Club

The Meadow Brook chose to relocate their hunting activities to the Jericho area. However, even here they would face similar difficulties when Robert Moses proposed to construct the Northern State Parkway through their hunting grounds. A bitter dispute developed between the club's members and Moses. New York State Governor Alfred E. Smith's highly unusual and impractical solution was to create a tunnel under the parkway so that the foxes could reach the other side of the parkway. Presumably the terrified foxes, which were being chased by hounds and huntsmen, would have the common sense to use the underpass rather than chance crossing the roadway.⁷

The intense rivalry between the two hunting clubs gradually shifted to polo. Introduced into New York City in 1876 by James Gordon Bennett, it quickly became the rage among the Island's socially elite. In 1881 members of the Meadow Brook Hunt Club formally incorporated the Meadow Brook [original spelling] Polo Club. Its roster of players was a veritable who's who of the Island's social register. The club's "Big Four," Harry Payne Whitney, Devereaux Milburn, Sr., and Larry and Monty Waterbury, dominated international polo winning the Westchester Cup from Great Britain in 1909 and successfully defending it in 1911 and 1913. With the retirement of Whitney in 1914, the cup was lost and would not be regained until 1921 when Devereaux Milburn, Sr., Louis Ezekiel Stoddard, Sr., James Watson Webb, Sr., and Thomas Hitchcock, Jr. defeated the British team.

The game reached its zenith in the 1920s and 1930s with polo players becoming the era's celebrities. The Meadow Brook, known as the "Heart of American Polo," with its eight fields each larger than seven football fields and its forty thousand-spectator International Field, became the site of the internationally prestigious United States Polo Open and Westchester Cup matches. ¹⁰ On days that matches were held, the Island's roads were clogged with traffic as fans attempted to reach the polo fields while other fans were accommodated by special trains scheduled by the Long Island Rail Road. Indeed, polo had become so popular that when the DuPont Company was approached to sponsor a radio program to be aired at 3 o'clock on Sundays, the company rejected the proposal stating, "Everyone is playing polo." World War II would take a significant toll on the popularity of polo on the Island as the country's priorities addressed the war effort. Its diminished popularity continued after the war culminating in 1953 when the U.S. Polo Open moved from the Meadow Brook, where it had been held since 1923, to the Oak Brook Polo Club in Hinsdale, Illinois, as the hub of polo activities migrated westward. A year later the Meadow Brook Polo Club's site was sold to the federal government and became a runway for jet airplanes at Mitchel Field. The club's activities were relocated to Jericho and in 1968 that site was sold for a housing development. No longer commanding the popularity of its heyday, the Meadow Brook Polo Club currently holds matches at Bethpage State Park and at the club's field on Whitney Lane in Old Westbury while the Rockaway Hunting Club has shifted its emphasis to golf and tennis.

Meadow Brook Polo Club's International Field

With the advent of World War I, the airplane was no longer viewed as a phenomenon; it was evolving into an important industry and Long Island was in the forefront. Estates that had been established by polo and hunting club members as well as others of the Island's socially elite in the communities of Hempstead, Uniondale, Salisbury, and East Meadow gradually gave way to the development of the aviation industry. The large estates of William Sake Hofstra, The Netherlands, Sidney Dillon Ripley Sr., The Crossways, Elliot Roosevelt, Sr., Half Way Nirvana, Adolph Ladenburg, Heathcote, Jacques Lebaudy, Phoenix Lodge, and Oliver Hazard Perry Belmont, Brookholt, disappeared as the focus of the Plains changed.

While most people will recognize Roosevelt Field as the site of Charles Lindbergh's 1927 transatlantic flight, few will be aware of or recognize the significance of Washington Avenue Field, Nassau Boulevard Field, Hempstead Plains Airfield, Camp Mills, Hazelhurst Field, Aviation Field #2, Curtiss Field, and Curtiss Airport in the creation and development of the aviation industry. Six years after the Wright Brothers' 1903 flight at Kitty Hawk, Washington Avenue Field (sometimes referred to as Mineola Field) was established by the New York Aeronautic Society on land leased from the Garden City Company. Located adjacent to the present-day site of the Mineola Court House complex in Garden City, the field extended southward from Old Country Road and was bounded on the west by Garden City's Washington Avenue. The very year the field was established, Glenn Curtiss would win the Scientific American Trophy and $10,000 when he flew a fifteen-and-a-half-mile circuit over Mineola and Westbury in a historic fifty-eight-minute flight which originated and ended at Washington Avenue Field. Si

The Hempstead Plains again came to the forefront of aviation history when in 1910 the First American International Aerial Tournament was held at the Belmont Park Racetrack. The week-long event attracted some forty contestants and more than seventy-five thousand spectators to watch the competitions between aviators from Europe and the United States. The event was somewhat marred when one of the highlights of the tournament, a race from Belmont Park Racetrack to the Statue of Liberty, a hotly contested event with national pride and international standing at stake, was won by the American entry John Moisant over the Englishman Claude Graham White in an extremely close and disputed finish.¹⁶

Garden City's Nassau Boulevard Field was established in 1910 because of the inadequacies at the Washington Avenue Field. The three hundred and fifty-acre field was located in the northwestern section of Garden City, roughly corresponding to the area between the village's present-day Nassau Boulevard and Merillon Avenue railroad stations. Much more extensive than the Washington Avenue Field, it consisted of thirty-one hangers, five grandstands, repair shops, a refreshment stand, an administrative building, and Giuseppe Bellanca's flying school. Just one year after the establishment of the field it hosted the Island's Second International Aerial Tournament. It was during this meet that Earl Lewis Ovington, the country's first airmail pilot, made the United States' first airmail delivery flying five and a half miles from the Nassau Boulevard Field to Mineola where at five hundred feet he tossed the mail pouch over the side near the Mineola post office.

The meet also saw the first demonstration of aerial reconnaissance by the military when Lieutenants Henry Harley "Hap" Arnold and Thomas DeWitt Milling successfully demonstrated how concealed enemy soldiers could be located from the air.¹⁷

By 1912 the constant complaints of excessive noise by the area's residents caused the Washington Avenue and Nassau Boulevard Fields to be relocated to the nine hundred-acre Hempstead Plains Airfield, which had been established in 1911 east of Garden City's Clinton Road. For its time, it was a truly impressive facility with thirty-five hangers, Glenn Curtiss' flying school, and four grandstands that could accommodate sixteen hundred spectators.¹⁸

Five years after the establishment of the Hempstead Plains Airfield, Camp Mills was established near the airfield as a training facility and a principal embarkation center for World War I soldiers. Named for Brigadier General Albert L. Mills, it quickly evolved from a tent encampment to an 838-building compound. Facilities sufficient to support fifty thou-

Camp Mills

108 lavatories, 105 mess halls, 69 quarantine huts, 2 delousing stations, and a 2,500-bed hospital. The site had its own water and sewer pump stations and an electrical sub-station. A Liberty Theatre, a library, and seven post exchanges were available to the troops; three stables and two haysheds were provided for the horses of the mounted troops. ¹⁹ In 1918 Camp Mills was merged with the adjacent Aviation Field #2 to become Mitchel Field, a training facility for Army pilots. With the ending of hostilities, Mitchel Field became the only army post in the northeastern United States, the defense point for the metropolitan area, and a center for aviation experimentation.²⁰ With the outbreak of World War II Mitchel Field became the headquarters of the army's First Air Force and continued its role as the primary defense for the New York metropolitan area. By 1945 the field had become the headquarters of the Air Defense Command for the entire United States.

Mitchel Field would also become a victim of the area's population density when in 1949 all tactical aircraft were moved off the Island to other air bases. It finally closed in 1961 with most of its property being conveyed to Nassau County. Mitchel Field was the last airfield used for military operations in Nassau County. Today it is the site of Hofstra University's northern campus, Nassau Veterans' Memorial Coliseum, the Long Island Children's Museum, the Nassau County Firefighters Museum, and the Cradle of Aviation Museum together with hotels, restaurants, and a host of office buildings.

Hazelhurst Field had been established in 1917 on the site of the former Hempstead Plains Airfield as a World War I army pilot training center, on property previously used by the New York National Guard. The naming of the field honored Second Lieutenant Leighton Wilson Hazelhurst, Jr., who was killed in an airplane accident on June 11, 1912, at College Park, Maryland.²¹ In 1918 Hazelhurst was renamed Roosevelt Field in honor of President Theodore Roosevelt's son Quentin, who had trained at Hazelhurst and who was killed in 1918 during aerial combat over France.²²

Abandoned by the military after World War I, Roosevelt Field became a civilian commercial airport. By the mid-1930s it had become the country's largest and busiest private airport. In the period between the two world wars Roosevelt Field became the center of aeronautical experimentation, daredevil air shows, and record-breaking cross-country and transatlantic flights. Its decline was precipitated by a massive increase in the area's population, its lack of proximity to Manhattan, and the development of LaGuardia Airport which began operation in 1939. The real estate development company of Webb and Knapp purchased two hundred and fifty acres of the field as well as one hundred and ten acres of the adjacent Westbury Golf Club in 1951 for the construction of Roosevelt Field Shopping Mall thus ending another chapter in aviation history on the Plains.²³

In 1920 the western half of Roosevelt Field was sold to the Curtiss Aeroplane and Motor Corporation and renamed Curtiss Field. In 1929 Curtiss Field was reincorporated into Roosevelt Field when the company built Curtiss Airport in Valley Stream. From 1930 to 1933 the Valley Stream facility was the largest commercial airport on Long Island but was forced to close in 1933 due to financial pressures caused by the Depression.²⁴

The Aviation Country Club was established on the Hempstead Plains in 1929 in what was a more unusual use of the aviation facilities as the post-Lindbergh mania for flying became a leisure activity for the Island's socially elite. Seventy-six of the club's one hundred and seventy-five members owned their own planes while most of the remaining membership were licensed pilots. The club which, sold and rented planes, had a landing field, hangar, mechanics, fuel, and a flight instructor. The four-bedroom clubhouse had an adjacent swimming pool and tennis courts. In 1948 the club, which never had an accident in its almost twenty-year history, was sold to William Jaird Levitt, Sr. and became part of Levittown. ²⁵ For a while a few of the club's members entertained the idea of relocating the club to a small private airport in Commack but abandoned the idea due to lack of interest by the general membership. In 1950 the Aviation Country Club formally dissolved. The only reminder of the club's existence in the area is a street named Pilots Lane in Levittown.

Without question, the existence of the Island's approximately eighty airfields contributed to the continuing development of Long Island's aviation industry. In 1917 Glenn Curtiss built a plant in Garden City for the Curtiss Engineering Corporation. Devoted to aeronautical research and development, it was a separate company from his Curtiss Aeroplane and Motor Corporation, based in Hammondsport, New York.²⁶ The Garden City facility became a training ground for aeronautical engineers who were able to test their designs in the company's ten-foot-diameter wind-tunnel, which at the time was the largest in the country. In 1920 Curtiss decided to close his Hammondsport factory and move the headquarters of the Curtiss Aeroplane and Motor Corporation, as well as most of its airplane production, to Garden City where his company manufactured three-quarters of the nation's planes.²⁷ In 1929 the Curtiss Aeroplane and Motor Corporation merged with Wright Aeronautical Corporation to form the Curtiss—Wright Corporation. Two years later the firm relocated its manufacturing facilities to Buffalo, New York.

Beginning with the Curtiss Engineering Corporation, the Island's aviation industry mushroomed into such industry leaders as Grumann (Bethpage and Calverton), Republic (Bethpage), Sperry Gyroscope (Garden City, Lake Success, and Bethpage), and Fairchild Camera and Instrument (Farmingdale), which, in turn, gave impetus to the Island's numerous aviation sub-contractors.

With the end of the Cold War and the resulting reduction in the military complex, aviation companies gradually began to merge and relocate off the Island. Today the industry, which employed about five thousand workers by the end of the 1930s and which had reached its peak of some ninety to one hundred thousand employees during World War II, accounts for only about twenty-five to thirty thousand of the Island's jobs.

In an odd twist of fate, the military bases and the aeronautical industry they spawned on the Hempstead Plains, once the powerhouse of the Island's economy, became victims of the post-war boom in residential and industrial development which they were instrumental in creating. The original flora of the Plains has been diminished as well by suburbanization to a fraction of its original sixty thousand acres. Seventy-nine acres, the Hempstead Plain Preserve just south of Charles Lindbergh Boulevard and nineteen additional acres located on the campus of Nassau Community College, are all that remain.²⁸ The estate homes in the Five Towns area, that have survived, have, in many instances, had their architectural integrity compromised by subsequent owners. What remains virtually untouched is what Garden City residents refer to as the original estate area located in the central section of their village. The estate areas in the villages of Hempstead, East Meadow, Uniondale, and Salisbury are, however, forever gone.

- 3. Historians generally agree that the New Market Race Track was located in the northwestern section of the Town of Hempstead but there is a lack of consensus as to its exact location. They have placed the site of the tract in the present day villages of New Hyde Park, Garden City, and Garden City Park prior to its relocation in the early 1800s to a site three miles west of Jamaica in Queens County when it became the Union Race Track.

The Belmont Park Racetrack is situated on the grounds of de Forest Manice's estate Oatlands. The track's original Turf and Field Clubhouse was the estate's main residence. See Manice entry in this volume.

Roosevelt Raceway was the site of an ill-fated automobile racetrack created to host the dormant Vanderbilt Cup races, a project that was abandoned after only two races. It became the site of Roosevelt Raceway in 1940. Harness racing ceased at Roosevelt Raceway in 1988.

Historical notes:

The house, originally named Brookholt, was built by Oliver Hazard Berry Belmont. It contained nine master bedrooms, nine bathrooms, and thirteen bedrooms for servants.

He was the son of August and Caroline Slidell Perry Belmont, Sr. of Nursery Stud Farm in North Babylon. Sarah Swan Whiting Belmont was the daughter of Augustus and Sarah Swan Whiting, Sr. of Newport, RI. She separated from Oliver during their Paris honeymoon because of his excessive drinking and his affair with a French dancer. Oliver refused to recognize their daughter Natica as his child and disinherited her. In 1907, Natica married William Proudfit Burden. She died of asphyxiation in 1908 due to a faulty gas line to a lamp. Natica had been adopted by Sarah's second husband George Lockhart Rives. Sarah and George's son Francis married Helen Leigh Hunt, the daughter of Leigh Smith James and Jessie Nobel Hunt, and resided at Mapleglades in Hewlett Bay Park.

[See previous entry for information on the Belmont family.]

The estate was subsequently owned by Alexander Smith Cochran, who sold it in 1923 to the Cold Stream Golf Club. [The New York Times November 18, 1923, p. XII.]

Chambers, Jay (1877-1922) aka James A. Chambers

Occupation(s): artist - bookplate illustrator;

graphic artist, New York World

Civic Activism: directed and designed sets for numerous local and Brooklyn theatrical productions;

designed sets for General Organization of South Side High School, 1915;

donated 800 modern American and foreign bookplates to the Flatbush Branch of the New York Public Library

Marriage(s): 1900-1922 – Laha Whittaker (1872-1958)

- Civic Activism: involved in numerous local school and community theatrical productions; president, Mothers Club of Lynbrook; a founder, Lynbrook Public Library

Address: 228 Earle Avenue, Lynbrook

Name of estate:

Year of construction: 1915

Style of architecture: Long Island Farmhouse

Architect(s):

Landscape architect(s): House extant: yes Historical notes:

James A. Chambers was the son of James Slater and Elizabeth Mendora Chambers.

Laha Whittaker Chambers was the daughter of Charles and Mary Blanchard Chambers. Her name was Malaysian for princess.

James A. and Laha Whittaker Chambers' family was totally dysfunctional. James did not want or like children and seldom spoke to his sons. In spite of the fact that he made a good salary as an artist, he refused to repair the house or purchase adequate furniture. The kitchen was created by moving a service building against the house. The juncture of the two buildings leaked for ten or twelve years until his son Richard was old enough to climb onto the roof and repair it. The wallpaper in the house was old, faded and peeling. The ceiling in the living room/dining room collapsed revealing the laths. The yellow paint on the exterior of the house was faded and peeling.

In 1926, their twenty-three-year-old son Richard, who had taken to drink, committed suicide in the kitchen by turning on the stove's gas jets.

Their son Jay Vivian Chambers (aka Whittaker Chambers and David Whittaker Chambers), who was bi-sexual, married Esther Shemitz. He became a Soviet spy and testified before the House UnAmerican Activities Committee of Congress that Alger Hiss, who would later reside in East Hampton, was a member of the Communist Party. [See Spinzia, Long Island's Prominent Families in the Town of East Hampton – Hiss entry – and Whittaker Chambers, Witness: Whittaker Chambers. (New York: Random House, 1952).]

Lebaudy, Jacques (1868-1919)

Occupation(s): capitalist - owner, Huanchaca Silver Mine, Chile

Marriage(s): 1896-1919 – Augustine Delliere (1873-1950)

- entertainers and associated professions - French actress

Address: Valentine's Road, Salisbury

Name of estate: Phoenix Lodge

Year of construction:

Style of architecture: Modified Colonial Revival

Architect(s):

Landscape architect(s): House extant: no* Historical notes:

front facade, c. 1919

The house was previously owned by William Morrow Knox Olcott, who called it Phoenix Lodge. In 1913, Olcott sold the house to Lebaudy, who continued to call it Phoenix Lodge.

He was the son of French sugar refining magnet Jules Lebaudy and Amicie Piou Lebaudy. Jacques' sister was Countess Marie Teresa Jeanne Lebaudy de Fels.

In 1903, after inheriting $8 million from his parents, Jacques converted his yacht Frasquita into a battleship and sailed to North Africa where he proclaimed himself Jacques I Emperor of the Sahara. After being rebuffed by the French and Spanish governments, both of which laid claims to portions of North Africa, Lebaudy came to Long Island. Becoming increasingly unstable, he was confined to the state hospital in Amityville. He was released by a court order from the Amityville facility but was again institutionalized after assaulting his wife, but, then, again released. While his wife and eighteen-year-old daughter were on the second floor of their Long Island mansion, Lebaudy attempted to burn down the house. Hearing the noise, Mrs. Lebaudy came down the stairs and shot him five times, killing him instantly.

In 1922, Augustine Delliere Lebaudy married her bodyguard Henri Sudreau and took up residence in France. The Lebaudys' daughter Marguerite married Henri Sudreau's son Roger and also resided in France.

*In 1926, the estate was purchased by Lannin Realty Company. In 1935, several of the estate's service buildings were destroyed by fire.

Address: between Nassau and Hempstead Avenues, West Hempstead

Name of estate:

Year of construction: c. 1855

Style of architecture:

Architect(s):

Landscape architect(s): House extant: no Historical notes:

The house was built by Samuel E. Johnson. He served as a Kings County judge, Brooklyn school superintendent, and New York State Assemblyman. The fourteen-acre farm was later purchased by the Robinsons.

Charles M. Robinson was the son of the Robinson Circus owner John Robinson.

Josephine DeMott Robinson, who was a third-generation circus performer, was the daughter of James and Josephine Tourniaire DeMott.

The Robinsons did not have children. Josephine would later adopt Verona Ruth Oakley, who married Harold Francis

Merritt, Sr. and resided in Garden City. [See Merritt entry.]

In 1917, Josephine sold the house and property to William Collins, who, in 1940, sold it to a developer who drained the farm's pond and built the Hempstead Manor housing development. A portion of the property became the site of the Hebrew Academy of Nassau County.

Address: 104 Eleventh Street, Garden City

Name of estate:

Year of construction:

Style of architecture: Norman Revival

Architect(s): Olive Frances Tjaden designed her own residence Landscape architect(s): Olive Frances Tjaden designed her own landscaping

House extant: yes Historical notes:

The house was built by Olive Frances Tjaden Johnson. She designed over two thousand buildings, four hundred of which were on Long Island. In addition, she planned the house for the 1939 World's Fair, Inwood Country Club in Atlantic Beach, apartment buildings in Lawrence, and the remodeling of the Congregational Church in Garden City.

Olive Tjaden entered Cornell University at the age of fifteen and completed the university's five-year architectural degree in four years. She was the only woman in her class of 1928 to graduate with an architectural degree and was the youngest registered architect in New York State. The university's Tjaden Hall and Van Sickle Art Gallery are named in her honor. In 1938, Olive was the first woman to be inducted into the American Institute of Architects and, for over two decades, was considered to be the most prominent woman architect in the Northeast. [Sarah Allaback, The First American Women Architects (Urbana, IL: University of Illinois Press, 2008), p. 40.]

She was the daughter of John and Hilda Francke Tjaden of Queens Village, NY.

*Although married twice, Tjaden used her maiden name professionally.

Her Garden City office was located at 109 Seventh Street.

She relocated to Florida in 1945.

Carl Johnson was the son of Alfred Johnson.

About the Authors

Judith and Raymond Spinzia are former Long Island residents, now residing in central Pennsylvania. Their first book, Long Island: A Guide to New York's Suffolk and Nassau Counties (New York: Hippocrene Books, 1988; 1991 revised; 2008 revised), is a standard reference book which has been used as a textbook for teaching Long Island history and can be found in almost all public libraries and schools on Long Island.

The Spinzias write and speak, jointly and separately, on a variety of Long Island-related subjects including the North and South Shore estates, Tiffany stained-glass windows, and the Vanderbilts of Long Island. On several occasions their lectures have been chosen by the former radio station of The New York Times, WQXR, as the cultural event of the day in the New York Metropolitan area. Additionally, they have been featured on local television and radio programs and in articles published by The New York Times, Newsday, and other regional newspapers.

The Spinzias served as Long Island history consultants for a local cable television channel that, in an effort to encourage local interest, aired material from their guidebook twice daily. They also were consultants for a Japanese television network for a documentary on Louis Comfort Tiffany and contributed material to the Arts and Entertainment Network's "Biography" series for its presentations on the Vanderbilt and Tiffany families.

Their six-volume documentation of Long Island's estate era presently includes:

Long Island's Prominent North Shore Families: Their Estates and Their Country Homes. 2 volumes, 2006, revised 2019.

Long Island's Prominent South Shore Families: Their Estates and Their Country Homes in the Towns of Babylon and Islip, 2007, revised 2021.

Long Island's Prominent Families in the Town of Hempstead: Their Estates and Their Country Homes, 2010, revised 2022. Long Island's Prominent Families in the Town of Southampton: Their Estates and Their Country Homes, 2010. Long Island's Prominent Families in the Town of East Hampton: Their Estates and Their Country Homes, 2020.
